Read more information à € "In the last five years, Cameroon's English-speaking regions have rapidly transformed into a war zone. The lives have been lost, the properties have been destroyed and the humanitarian crisis continues to intensify. In its latest report, the UN Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA) highlighted the impact on education: "From the moment of the beginning of the 2016 crisis, education was strongly affected. Many Schools are closed to avoid frequent attacks against educational structures. Teachers and students have been attacked, kidnapped, threatened and killed. In 2021 more than 700,000 children are devoid of education in the north-west and south-west regions. " Felix Agbor Nkongho, a human rights lawyer, who was a leading member of the Oval Outlaw Cameroon Anglophone Civil Society Consortium (CACSC), was discouraged by the current crisis. "The current status of business in Anglofone regions is very sad," DW said. "It is very regrettable. It's frustrating." Although the CACSC conducted the first wave of peaceful protests against the marginalization of the federal government of the Anglophonic regions of Cameroon in 2016, Agbor Nkongho said that violence has never been part of the group's agenda. "No one had a crystal ball that could see the future," he said. "In general we have not foreseen violence". The young cameroonian anglophones have sought refuge in Nigeria, after the crisis has become an uncatherin but peaceful armed conflict begins Agbor Nkongho said the initial measures for government pressure à € "such as the locking and school boycotts à €" they were They intended only to last for a short time. He blames Yaounde for increasing the situation. ["The measures] were just to attract attention to the international community on what we were passing as a people," he said. We also intended to call school boycott before the consortium was outlawed. "In view of the day of the country's unit, on 1 October, the situation in the two English-speaking regions of Cameroon remains uncertain. Speaking on behalf of the Board of Directors Dell 'Ambazonia (Agovc) The Deputy Chief of Defense of the Movement, Emmanuel Ndong, briefly explained the story behind their cause. "The Cameroon of the British South, which today is called Ambazonia, earned its independence from the UK after the resolution UN 1608, which finished the British mandate to govern the southern Cameroon on 1 October 1961. "Ndong said DW. Nkongho said the government's decision to mark Unity Day on this date was "the height of political hypocrisy". political." Paul Biya|can take all of us by an ambush by declaring October 1 a national holiday in Cameroon", he said. Felix Agbor Nkongho, the leader of the outlawed CACSC, says the regime has "done nothing to demonstrate good faith" civilians victims of an unclear strategy for the Cameroonians directly affected by the conflict, "Talk about dates and history isA nonsense. "The government and separatists are gambling with the lives of the local people they claim to protect", Nfor Mktu, an English-speaking taxi driver, told DW. "These parties involved in the ongoing crisis are protecting their interests. They're not protecting anyone". Nelson Tum, a history teacher, said the fighting between the separatists and the government had left him and many others suspicious on both sides. Paul Nilong, of the provisional government of Ambazonia, said the federal government tried to make "Ambazonia ungovernable - it's about destroying everything". "The most important part is economic sabotage", said Ndong. The separatists, however, have not always agreed on their strategy, especially when it comes to repeated lockdowns, something Ndong acknowledged has damaged their cause. "We think it is counterproductive to declare a two-week lockdown of the territory, which will impose further hardship on our people who are already suffering the brunt of the war", he said. . But Nilong said the block was necessary to send a message to the government. "The two-week blockade was to tell Yaounde they don't have control", he said. Government's lack of progress due to "bad faith" The government has been accused of not doing enough to stem the crisis. Elvis Ngolle Ngolle, a member of Cameroon's ruling Peopleás Democratic Movement (CPDM) party that previously served as Minister for Forestry and Wildlife, told DW that officials are doing their best to end the violence. "The government has good intentions and has done a lot to try to put an end to the crisis and, in particular, to try to put an end to the crisis. History professor Tum said that the government has tried to bring calm back to the English-speaking regions, but he described the efforts as insufficient. "The government has done a lot, but I'll say it's not enough to end the crisis", Tum said. "During the conduct of an important national dialogue, those we consider leaders of the English-speaking regions were not involved in the dialogue with the government". President Paul Biya said the shape of the state is not in question Ngolle said the lack of progress by the government has more to do with "bad faith." of some individuals trying to "benefit from the conflict". "Apparently, money is flying around on both sides, and they seem to benefit from Money", he said. No end in sight separators said the government's implementation of increasingly sophisticated weapons means that the conflict will not end for them anytime soon." The R & D has been modified to create a heavy impact and will continue until Yaounde gives up the struggle", said Nilong of Ambazonia. Deputy Defense Chief Ndong said the separators were even looking abroad to draw more international attention to their cause." We try to destabilize the Gulf of Guinea and ensure the exploitation of resources in this area stopped until the international community comes to the recognition that [they are the only] people, who can guarantee peace and stability", said Ndong. It is no longer Cameroon and Nigeria but Biafra and Ambazonia. "Ngolle NgolleÁ€. A political solution would be preferable to a military option. "I'm not a military man", he said. "I am one of those who believe that the political arm works, has worked and can work. I'm one of those people who believes that dialogue should never stop. "Hopes for the international community to act AGBOR NKONGHO will believe that the final solution will require the international community to impose travel bans and freeze the assets of the parties who are fuelling the conflict. But to him, any progress needs to start with honesty. "Friends of Cameroon in the international community, they should be honest with BiyaÁ€ and tell him that he cannot win the war", he said. He also warns that Separatists should not feel as if they are immune to justice. "Non-state actors should be made." They should be made to understand that if you incite rape or commit crimes, you should be held responsible", he said.
